STILL HARPING ON THE PAST.

The Bourbons who learn nothing add forget nothing, are not all of the Gallic and Iberian type. We have their counterpart in Polynesia in the person of the ex-Hawaiian Queen, who in her latest interview, still speaks in the plurals of Majesty, dwells on the vicissitudes of "our native subjects" and expresses an unsophisticated faith in the validity of her title to the throne. Even Royalist readers of Mr. Irvine's interview with the fallen sovereign must have been keenly diverted by Mrs. Dominis' obstinate position. There is in it a reminiscence of "Henry V.", the helpless pretender who died in France not many years ago, surrounded to the last by the kneeling courtiers of a lost cause who for money called him sire and to whom in passing from nature to eternity he held out a condescending hand for the kiss of the "subject" who was even freer than himself. So, too, the spectacle brings to mind Bunyan's allegory, in which Giant Pagan, though dethroned and impotent, still sits by the wayside in faded state as a king and shakes his palsied fist at the pilgrim who goes by on the route to the Delectable City and who gives him but a careless glance. Poor old monarchs of the buried past—and of these is Liliuokalani who talks of "our" Kingdom and "our people" and "our prerogatives," just as though the Kingdom had not vanished and as though the people were still bowing at the feathered throne.

THE CASE OF MR. WILLIS.

The morning paper is quite right in the statement that, since the publication of Mr. Willis' later letters to his Government, the demand at this end of the line for the return of his passports has ceased. Whatever may have been Mr. Willis' faults of diplomacy at the outset of his Hawaiian career—and these were due, primarily, to the studied misrepresentations of Mr. Blount—the facts remain that he did his best afterwards to make up for them; and that, by the moderation of his councils, the discretion with which he used his powers and the just estimate which he formed and published in regard to the character of the Provisional leaders and the Royalist malco tents, Mr. Willis did much to assure a happy issue out of all our troubles.

Upon this view of the case the STAR trusts that our people will let by-gones be by-gones and will make the stay of the American Minister and his family as pleasant as possible. As Richelieu said of great men so it may be said of nations: "They gain doubtly when they make foes friends."

GETTING TOGETHER.

The most auspicious sign of the times is the peace conference which has been yesterday by representatives of the American League and of the Union Party. There was every reason, so far as political principles were concerned, why such a conference should bring harmony of action. The only danger lay in the prejudice of individuals. This peril, however, seems to have been allayed and the outlook now is that the members of the League, while not losing their corporate identity, will act with and participate in the councils of the Union Party; and that, so long as responsibility and favors are fairly shared and divided, so long will the Union Party include all persons who have annexation for their political watchword. The peace which has now begun will be further cemented, we trust, by the election of D. B. Smith to the Councils. Thereafter there should be plain sailing for all hands.

If respect for the law can be maintained by an official attitude of "good-natured contempt" for those who break it—side the Advertiser—then Utopian government is about ready to dawn. In Hawaii nothing would suit the law-breakers better than a "good-natured" policy of that sort. But what about society, which the laws are framed to protect?

The Bulletin seeks to convey the idea that the editor of the STAR was "placed above the law" by his discharge as defendant in the five Wilson libel cases. The records of the court show that the plaintiff failed to present his indictments, and that nothing remained for Judge Whiting but to end the proceedings in the way he did. So far as the defendant is concerned he asked no favors and was ready to proceed to trial. The cases came to a stop merely because the Wilson bluff had broken down.

The Examiner has an article entitled "Norsemen of the Pacific" and signed Rene Bache. Portions of it appeared in the STAR a week or two since and caused some interest about Rene Bache in the minds of the members of the Historical Society, who had heard the same article read by its author, Dr. N. B. Emerson, several months ago. Rene Bache has simply cribbed the Doctor's matter and sold it to American papers at space rates.

The First District Club would do well, if it desires party harmony, not to interfere with the nomination now before the Councils. Mr. Smith should be elected. After that is done, election for future vacancies by the regular party machinery will be more in order—in fact, fully in order. Meanwhile policy rather than prejudice should be employed on all sides.

CHRISTMAS BEFORE CHRIST.

Similar Celebrations by Pagan Centuries Before Christ. Christmas holidays do not begin with the year 1. They began before that. In Jerusalem, as the days lengthened and the day-light commenced to get the better of darkness the people kept the Feast of Tabernacles. The sprays of green with which the churches and our homes are made beautiful to-day have grown from the branches of olive and palm and pine and myrtle of that Hebrew festival. And the lights which glitter from the Christmas candles are lighted from the grate lamps, which, in the court of Herod's Temple at that great feast, cast their glow into the streets of the holy city.

In Rome at that season they kept the Saturnalia, the celebration of the winter solstice, Saturnalia at Rome was a time of holiday for children. All the schools were closed. Indeed, the boys and girls had a more complete and delightful vacation under the old Saturnalia than they have under the new, for during that season there was a cessation of all punishment, the birch being in unaccustomed idleness. There was neither school nor scolding.

The clerks in the Roman shops, however, had no more vacation than ours have. All the stores were open till 11 o'clock in the evening, and were crowded all day long. The streets were full of purchasers, and all the passers-by bore bundles. Everybody was getting gifts for somebody.

The same long lists were then made out in Latin that are now set down in English, and checked off in tally of the gifts—this for little Claudius, and that for little Aurelius, and that for little Virginia; and what for Agrippa? and how will this do for Portia? The greatest crowds were at the doll stores. Some of those old dolls are still staring out of their wide eyes to-day, wondering at the people who wonder at them in the museums of New York and London. Once they were fondled by little fingers, and caressed by little mothers, and attired in little togas. Were they put in Saturnalian stockings? I know not. Certain it is, however, that they were the commonest of gifts at those old Pagan Christmas times. Every baby had a Christmas doll.

I can find no trace, in that old day, of Santa Claus. That good saint, whose name was Nicholas, lived in the middle ages, and showed his kindness of heart and his love for little children by throwing in gifts through the windows of the houses of the poor. One of the best saints in the whole calendar to have in remembrance just at Christmas time! It is not likely that the Roman mothers told their children much about old Saturn, a grim ogre of a bad reputation who was reported to have a keen appetite for tender little children.

In one respect the pagan Saturnalia was more Christian than the Christian Christmas. All distinctions of rank were laid aside. Slaves, we are told, sat at table with their masters. Sometimes the mistress and her daughters got the Christmas dinner, and the cook and chambermaid and the nurse girl sat at the table in the state dining room with the coachman and the butler, while the master of the house carved at the side table and the ladies served the courses. This was a reminiscence, they say, of that long distant golden age when Saturn ruled, and "Adam delved and Eve spun," and everybody, no matter what his station, was a gentleman.

Thus there was a Christmas before Christ. He came and lived His wonderful life and died and rose again, ascended into heaven and the Church began. Nothing was more natural and right than that they who loved Him should strive to keep the anniversary of His blessed birth. But the exact date was not known. They had forgotten, if they ever knew, when Christ was born. The 25th day of December is not mentioned in the Bible. Probably the season of the year would be approximated by tradition. He came as the long nights began to grow shorter and the brief dark days began to lengthen and grow brighter.

So the festival began. But, besides, it was the rejecting at the same season of all the Christians' pagan neighbors. And presently, as the pagans were converted, there were in the Church itself great numbers of people who were accustomed at this time to keep the old ways of their fathers, to light candles and to give gifts and to make merry. The wise Church, desirous of all things good, and glad to take the good from any giver, appropriated all that was best in that pagan Saturnalia. It encouraged people to continue their former customs with the new meanings which the new truth suggested. The candles which had typified the victory of light over darkness in the world of nature were taken for symbols of a better victory in the spiritual realm. The gifts were made to be reminiscences of that supreme gift which God gave when He sent His Son. The old joy lived on, and was rather increased than diminished. Saturn gave place to Christ. The pagan feast became the Christian festival.

MR. INGALLS AT A REVIVAL.

The Kansas Statesman Greets Sam Jones at a Religious Meeting.

NASHVILLE, Feb. 9.—When Evangelist Sam Jones called for converts last night at the gospel tabernacle in this city, where he is holding a revival, the first person in the line of those who went forward to take his hand was the Hon. John James Ingalls of Kansas. Mr. Ingalls has been in Nashville several days and lectured to-night.

"I endorse every word you say," he remarked, as he grasped Jones' hand. "God bless you," responded Mr. Jones, fervently. "Possibly," said a spectator, "the decalogue may after all have a place in politics and hope for the politicians prove more than an iridescent dream."

Rich Red Blood

Results from taking Hood's Sarsaparilla

Mr. Chas. Walker of San Francisco.

"For several years I have been troubled with blotches and pimples on my face and body, which were very annoying. I tried several prescriptions, and also other medicines, but they did not seem to benefit me. Last fall a friend advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. It was determined to give it.

A Thorough Trial. After using two bottles, my skin returned to its natural state. I still use it, as it gives me strength and vigor. I never had better health in my life, and I owe it to taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. CHAS. WALKER, with Carroll Mfg. Co., 48 Eighth Street, San Francisco.
